

Sergeant Major Ohhhkevindebruynne serves as the Operations Manager and the Chief of Public Relations and social media manager of the Incel Protection Force (IPF) and the Incel Liberation Movement (ILM). Throughout his life, he has been treated differently due to his aesthetic appearance. He was bullied daily at school for his ginger hair and subjected to great mockery for many years by the normies he spent most of his time with at school. Following the typical blue pill advice for many years due to the constant brainwashing from society and his parents, who would give him clichéd advice like "looks don't matter, it's your personality" and "not all women are shallow," he slowly realized something was amiss when all his peers were able to form relationships with the opposite sex due to their superior aesthetic appearance, whether it be height or face.

Despite being average socially and good at sports, which allowed him to build some weak relationships with normies over the years and gain great insight into their hedonistic lifestyles with women, he was unfairly denied these experiences. Women, in his view, destroyed his life by causing him to lose all the normies he had spent years building relationships with. He now feels distant and unable to relate to them due to how vastly different their lives have become, attributed to his lack of sexual experiences with women. Women, he believes, never gave him a chance, yet gave most of the unworthy men he went to school with a chance just because they were taller or had a better face. They disregarded him, treated him like trash, and often chose harsher forms of rejection by mocking his appearance.

Initially, he tried the red pill approach by self-improving based on the advice of British red pill YouTubers Hamza Ahmed and 1STMAN, dedicating his life to going to the gym, eating healthy, and other self-improvement methods. However, this gave him no success, as he believes women care most about things that cannot be changed like face, height, frame, and penis size. When younger and bluepilled, he dreamed of finding a woman and marrying her for life, giving her his eternal love and affection. As the years passed, he became more resentful and angrier at the world, contrasting with his younger self who was much kinder to women, normies, and chads.

Women, in his view, denied him the right to the life he dreamed of, and now he seeks justice and retribution. He believes no man should ever feel how he did and watch his life fade into despair and loneliness at the hands of women, considering it an injustice that needs to be dealt with. He promises his comrades that he will do everything in his power to ensure no more future men have to go through this hell.
